

Where Is The Sculpture?

By Juliet Glazer

Every day, while waiting for the school bus, my mom and I would admire a sculpture in a store window. The sculpture was a beautiful pale yellow color, and could bend in round curvy shapes. Each morning, I looked forward to seeing what unique shape the store owner would bend it in, and I would go to school with that wonderful sculpture still in my head. When I came home, the sculpture would be there in the store window, for me to admire.

One afternoon, I stepped off the bus like usual. I said hello to my mom, like usual. I looked at the store window to see the sculpture, like usual. But... where was the sculpture? OH NO!!

Maybe I had seen it wrong, I thought. I decided to look one more time.

OH NO!! Where was my favorite sculpture from the store window? Where was it? There was an empty space in the store window, where the sculpture used to be. Like a building getting knocked down, and becoming a vacant lot.

Suddenly, all of my ideas about

Jumping in the pond really late at night

Me and John were going <sup>Map in the pond</sup> really late at night John's <sup>map</sup> kept on telling come one jump <sup>va.</sup> I just could not. John kept on incourging me to do it. He said "you can do it come on something going to happen."

I had to do it. I jumped I closed my eyes and try to think of good things. Splash! I did it I yelled John ran up to me and said great job you did it your the bast.

I was terrified. I never was going to do it. I just could not. I was totally scared. I was thinking in my head about jumping in the pond and feeling the water touching me. The ice cold water. It was not pretty. I was trying to think of good things like beautiful skies and sea waters. But it did not work. John went over to me and said to me that it's ok really nothing is going to happen to you. Then he said hear why don't I show you then you can do it. I saw John walk up to the dock with full confidence in his eyes. He lifted his feet and flew in the air. I saw a big smile across his face and his mouth wide open screaming his guts out. Then his foot went under it only made a tiny splash but then his knee started to go under and I was really amazed because he still had that wide open smile

Then the splash was greater each time his body went down more into the pond. Then his whole body was down under the water. It kind of reminded me of the time me and John<sup>went</sup> <sup>was</sup> <sup>consuming</sup> white water class 2.

The riptides turned white because the strong current. When John jumped in the water/pond the water turned white. Then he spirt out of the water like a cork. He swam over.

He climbed up the ladder and stood on the dock. He said Its your turn. then I walked to the end of the dock bent my knees and I jumped in the air. I opened my eyes and easly felt kind of fun. Then I screamed. My feet went in then my knees and my
